

Are You an Education
Diplomat?

Education Diplomats serve in many roles throughout the education sector. If your current role requires any of the following roles or activities, then you are likely using and applying the skills of diplomacy within the education sector.

Does your work involve protecting and promoting education for all, worldwide?

Are you working to create a shared vision for education among different stakeholders?

Are you negotiating in order to promote and secure funding and resolve competing interests?

Are you working to create partnerships and alliances in support of education?

Are you building consensus around the goals for education at local and global levels?

Do you use 'active listening' techniques to help you learn about local educational needs?

Do you manage multiple stakeholder relationships in education?

Are you building capacity of actors within the education system?

Are you working across different sectors to take collective action?

Are you advocating for support for education in emergencies and crisis situations?

Are you Improving relations between countries through education exchanges?

Are you working to promote actions that help to decolonize education systems?

Do you facilitate knowledge exchange about innovative approaches to education design and delivery?

Do you use persuasion and influence to make changes that reform and transform education?

Are you working to highlight the importance of education to promote peace, equity, and inclusion?

What is Education Diplomacy?

Education Diplomacy, as conceived by CE International, is an exciting new concept and approach that can be used to advance education. Advancing education can be achieved by using the skills of diplomacy to reform and transform education systems and the education sector at large by helping people, organizations, and governments seek agreement and take collective action on critical education issues.
